From the Vicarage, July 2015

Dear Friends,

On Thursday 4th July an unusual procession wends along Upper Thames Street in the City of London. At the front, 2 top-hatted, white smocked wine porters sweep the road. This is to ensure that the following procession does not ‘slip into any foulness’ – which might well have happened 700 years ago when the custom began. This is the procession of the Worshipful Company of Vintners, who have just elected their new Master and Wardens.

They are going to church to attend a special service. They are accompanied by the Company’s Barge Master and Swan Markers. (The Vintners, Dyers and the Queen own the swans on the Thames between Henley and London Bridge). Towards the end of July this group takes to the river for the ceremony of Swan Upping – marking all the cygnets to indicate to whom they belong. 2 marks on beaks says Vintner, one says Dyers, whilst none says Queen! Representatives of these companies meet on Midsummer Day to elect two sheriff fs for the City of London and, later in the year the Lord Mayor. (Not Boris – who is Mayor of London, not the City and, I suspect, would not be voted for by Black Cab drivers!!)).

These are very colourful occasions and steeped in history. These customs are not dissimilar to those of weddings. We are well into the season of weddings - Kate and Simon, Xochi and Ben, having already been ‘done’, whilst Jenni and Greg, Claire and Jaime, and Louise and Harlan are ‘straining like greyhounds in the slips’.

Weddings abound with customs and traditions – not always understood, or appreciated. The Bride is ‘given away’ – this goes back to Roman times (when arranged marriages were the norm) and the woman was, literally, given away to a new 'owner'. The Bride's father walked down the aisle with his daughter on his left hand side – leaving his sword-hand free if he was attacked. The ring is placed on the third finger as the Greeks believed the third finger was connected to the heart. Bridesmaids were used to distract evil spirits should they try to trespass upon the bride. After the wedding it was the tradition to throw rice – a symbol of fertility for the Romans. Pagans handed out sugared almonds (or their version of them) which represented health, wealth, happiness, fertility and long life. This was overtaken by shredded paper – popular with Victorians but who quickly got tired of picking it out of their hair and invented confetti! The 'something blue' element in the wedding mantra was to show purity. The white dress was a Victorian 'fashion fad' following the wedding of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert - and, thus, quickly adopted by ladies of gentility.

For all the interesting customs that add colour to our lives today we give thanks, Lord. Bless all those who have been, and will be, married in this place.

Village Hall Decoration. You will notice a big improvement already. An energetic working party removed all the yellow tape and the sticky stuff from the floor which is looking a lot smarter now. The whole interior of the hall will be redecorated in mid-October and then we will have the court professionally marked out with painted white lines, all ready for the autumn and winter badminton season. The Committee expresses their warmest thanks to everyone who helped out so willingly for all their hard work; we've saved £504 by doing this work ourselves! Val Belton

Village Committee Treasurer's Report for 2014/15. Our financial year ended on 5th April and thanks to the efforts of a great many people, it has been a very successful one. A special mention is due to the Social Committee, who organized many enjoyable events this year which collectively have made a handsome profit of c£1,075. We don't expect all social events to be profitable but it's nice when they are, as we can then use some of those funds to lay on a children's Christmas party and refreshments for everyone after the carol service, as well as achieve improvements to the facilities in the village hall; this year these included effective new lighting, replacement of most of the cutlery, some smart new china serving dishes, a tea urn and Christmas tree lights. Many many thanks to everyone whose hard work made all this possible. Val Belton

Final result of Fete '15. The items so kindly donated by the Secombe family to sell at our Fete realised £307 at auction, so we made a grand total of £5,187.78. After expenses, the PCC and BVC have each received £2,227.62 – a truly terrific reward result. Val Belton

Open Garden Charity Event. Sunday 14th June. Bill and Rosie achieved great things by opening their beautiful garden in Wepham, and I can't help thinking how much we've accomplished in the last month, both for worthy causes within the village and outside, when so many people have been willing to join forces with their different skills and energies, resulting in two wonderful events. We can all feel very proud of ourselves, don't you agree?
